CEHR - THWACK!

'Equality' bullies thrashed in High Court ruling

After years of bullying decent people, Trevor Phillips and his 70 taxpayer-funded top lawyers finally came a cropper when they tried to pick on the British National Party.

In a typically scandalous abuse of state power, the Commission for Equality and Human Rights (CEHR) had spent three years plotting to destroy the British National Party, seize its assets and imprison its leaders.

Even when judges at the High Court found in favour of Nick Griffin, Simon Darby and Tanya Lumby late last year, the CEHR still claimed that costs would be awarded against the party and that it would effectively be destroyed.

This tall tale was also taken

Standing up for Saint George

"An insult to St. George and to every Englishman and woman." That's how Cllr. Mike Whitby (above), the British National Party's North West Regional Organiser, describes the latest attack on England's much-loved patron saint by the Politically Correct 'elite'.

The latest insult to the English comes from leftist clergy at Manchester Cathedral. The anti-English bigots have announced an 'alternative' service and hoax 'celebration' of St. George, which in fact is a deliberate attack on everything English.

Due to be held on Sunday 8th May, it is a direct response to the proper St. George's Day celebration organised last year by Manchester British National Party livewire Derek Adams after the city's Labour council refused to recognise

What we think

Most of all, it should lead to an historic judgement, securing for the indigenous British peoples of our islands the absolute right to self-association. This could still be several years away, but it is a massively rich legal prize. Not just a victory for the British National Party, but for our entire nation. Not just a victory for today, but a milestone on the road to justice for generations of our people yet to come.

Together we've not just won for our own Cause. We have also shown that, despite the Commission's army of tax-funded top lawyers, ordinary Brits like us can take them on – and win! Yet again we've shown that the British National Party is in the frontline of the fight for freedom.

This immigration tsunami will either trigger a nationalist revolution across Europe, or it will lead to the Islamic conquest of the West. Either way, Cameron and his allies will one day face justice for their crimes and their arrogant folly.

Standing up for Saint George

our national day.

Central to the leftists' running down of English tradition is their insulting depiction of Saint George (who was in fact a European Greek) as an African. Worse still, in an image that all true Christians will find deeply disturbing, 'George' is shown not killing a monstrous dragon symbolising evil, but freeing a meek and oppressed dragon from the chains of racist, Western oppression.

"This is a truly revolting, even sinister, perversion of the true message of our traditional St. George," said National Organiser Adam Walker as he confirmed that British National Party activists will demonstrate against the anti-English insult.

"The time when the Politically Correct 'elite' could belittle our traditional identity and precious cultural heritage without themselves paying a price is now over," vowed Mr. Walker.

"The British National Party is moving beyond merely contesting elections and complaining that things aren't right. From now on we will be confronting those who do our people down. Enough is enough; from now on we're going to hit back at the PC bullies and the anti-British bigots."

Stronger every year

All over England, British National Party members will be at the forefront of local community celebrations of St. George's Day. Long ignored or belittled by the political elite, awareness of Englishness and celebrations of England's national day are growing stronger every year.

From Carlisle to Dover, from the Suffolk coast to the borders of Wales, the 23rd of April sees English people and communities celebrating with family days, charity pub events, face-painting and a thousand-and-one other ways of having fun while showing that we're proud of who and what we are.

Leaflets and cakes – both campaign tools

Saint George on our streets as well as in our hearts

"My English Fair Fund is there to encourage the celebration of St. George's Day more than anything else," Nick Griffin told Freedom as he explained how money from the 10% of his European Parliament salary that he gives for good causes is going to help people all over the North West of England celebrate 23rd April.

"This year I'm giving money to groups all over my constituency to pay for cake-making material and St. George's Cross key fobs. These are being given out by our people in high streets all over the North West of England.

"I hope that our activists elsewhere in the country will do the same. And that our Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish teams will take note and do the same thing on their own Patron Saints' days.

"The English, Scots, Irish and Welsh are all 'peoples of the cross', yet our very right to fly the cross flags of our traditional saints is coming under creeping threat because of the anti-Christian left and their Islamist allies. Don't let them take away our identity and our freedom; do your bit to celebrate who we are – starting this 23rd April."

Celebrating Saint George's Day with your MEP

Nick Griffin will be celebrating St George's Day on Saturday 23rd April with constituents from across the whole of his North West Euro Region.

On the big day, there will be St George's Day stalls in dozens of towns and cities, giving out special red-and-white iced cakes and St George's Cross key rings.

Thousands of leaflets will be handed out in town centres, alerting the Saturday morning shoppers to the stall and its gifts, as well as informing people about Nick's English Fair Fund.

Nick gives 10% of his MEP salary to the fund, which is used to support good causes within his region. The fund also helps community groups and organisations to celebrate our English culture

Thousands of leaflets will be handed out and keep alive the traditions of our past which make up so much of the history of the region.

"I want the English people of my constituency to celebrate England's special day with me," said the MEP.

"There are concerted efforts by the politically correct brigade to erase St George's Day completely from our calendar. Others, such as some of our Church leaders who feel riddled with guilt over the Crusades, are trying to turn St. George's Day into some kind of multi-cultural festival more in keeping with a Caribbean carnival than a specifically English celebration."

Hard fight ahead, warns elections chief

With Labour riding high in the polls, the party faces intense competition for the working-class vote in England.

Our Manifesto for May's local council elections in England. Concise but comprehensive, the Manifesto can be read in full at www.bnp.org.uk – just click on 'Publications'

"Labour take your taxes – but not your rubbish!" That's the simple but hard-hitting message on the many thousands of "warm-up" leaflets going out all over England in the campaign for May's council elections.

The contest this year is going to be hard for the British National Party. These are the first council polls since we became a significant contender in local elections in which we face a Labour party that is out of national government

Four of our ten Councillors elected in West Cumbria this year: Dawn Charlton (Maryport Town Council), Malcolm Southward (Seacale Town Council), Clive Jefferson (Broughton Parish Council) and Paul Stafford (Wigton Town Council)

Going out by the thousands: The main leaflets in this year's English council elections are simple, striking and effective and riding high in the opinion polls.

Having been picked when Labour were in power and unpopular, almost all our target wards are in areas where Labour's vote will soar as voters punish the LibDems for their Coalition government betrayals.

As Labour take control of even more councils, and as the cuts really start to bite, we'll go back to beating Labour. But it will probably be several years before people realise that, even though the Tory/LibDem Government are to blame for local government cuts, it's Labour councillors who must take the blame for where the axe falls.

Tory and LibDem seats will become increasingly vulnerable to good British National Party campaigns. But it takes time to work a proper target seat. It needs local campaigns, regular ward newsletters, building up lists of local supporters and getting them registered as postal voters.

"We face a really hard struggle to hold seats we took four years ago in traditional Labour areas when Tony Blair was so unpopular," National

Tory and LibDem seats will become increasingly vulnerable to good British National Party campaigns

Elections Officer Clive Jefferson told Freedom.

"This year we must measure our success by the number of town and community council seats we take. This is the way to get more of our activists on the first rung of the local government ladder. It's an area we've neglected for far too long.

"And rather than fighting every last seat possible, we need to concentrate our real efforts in a small number so as to train as many activists as possible to use the powerful new campaigning techniques we've developed with our Alfred data system.

"We can now identify and target sympathetic voters far more effectively than ever before," says Cllr. Jefferson, "but this will only translate into election wins when our local activists learn to use the systems and put in the groundwork on the doorsteps.

"This is a long march that is going to take years. This campaign is about taking the first steps."

Labour bullies desperate to stop us standing

Threats to hotel orchestrated by expenses disgrace MP in shocking attack on democracy, as party launches biggest Scottish campaign ever.

Giving the Scottish the chance to back a real nationalist party. Our leaflets will be going out across huge swathes of Scotland

Labour Party threats of cancelled contracts and smashed windows forced a hotel in Falkirk to cancel a campaign launch press conference and black tie fund-raising dinner.

The event had been organised by Scotland British National Party but was stopped by a hate campaign headed by Eric Joyce. The MP for Falkirk West is one of Labour's most disgraced expenses fiddlers who has managed to hold onto his seat.

Expenses pig Joyce used his Twitter page to urge supporters to phone the hotel manager. Calls received by unfortunate members of staff included bomb and death threats.

Although the resulting loss of the venue was a blow, the affair did receive coverage on Scottish TV and in the papers. In fact, the fuss caused by Mr. Joyce probably led to more people hearing about the British National Party standing than would have resulted had the press conference gone ahead.

"The bullying blew up in their bigoted faces in financial terms too," the party's Cumbrian call centre manager Jennifer Matthys told Freedom. "When the news broke, we had calls and generous donations not just from members who had been planning to attend the dinner, but also from sympathetic members of the public in Scotland."

"They were all disgusted that, while nearly every Labour MP in the country was voting to waste billions of pounds bombing Libya into democracy, one of them was doing his best to murder democracy in Scotland."

"We still don't have all the money we need to fight our full campaign in Scotland, but the bullying Mr. Joyce certainly got our fund-raising off to a flying start!"

Scots with immigrants is making people really angry," says Scottish Regional Organiser Gary Raikes.

"In Glasgow, it's mainly about bogus asylum seekers being put to the front of the long housing queue. The city is changing before our eyes, with whole areas increasingly looking like Baghdad or Kabul. The steady increase in the wearing of the burqa is creeping Islamification and the destruction of traditional Scottish identity.

"Elsewhere, and especially all along the east coast, the big problem is Eastern Europeans taking jobs from local people and driving low wages even lower. Whole shifts are manned by foreigners. Willing and experienced Scottish workers don't even get interviews for the few jobs that do come up. Good people are rightly angry, and we're here to give them the chance to do something about it."

Biggest day of action ever in campaign launch for Welsh Assembly seat

"A real chance to break through into Big Time politics in one of the spiritual heartlands of Old Labour."

That's how British National Party leader Nick Griffin described the Welsh Assembly Elections to a packed meeting of activists at the end of the Day of Action that launched our campaign in Swansea.

The Day of Action saw activists from all over South Wales joined by teams from London, the Home Counties, the South West and Liverpool.

Four separate town centre tabletop stalls and five door-to-door teams were out at the same time, in the party's biggest ever such event in Wales.

The following weekend saw teams out to launch the campaign in North Wales, where lead candidate Cllr. John Walker has already established a significant profile, thanks to a big campaign against plans to build a mosque.

How we can win

Just one vote out of every fifteen will be enough to send a British National Party Assembly Member to the devolved Welsh government chamber in Cardiff.

The Welsh Assembly is elected with a system of partial Proportional Representation, with five super-constituencies topping up the first-past-the-post Assembly Members with twenty extra PR seats.

There are already more Muslims in Britain than there are Welsh people

One of these seats in each region can be taken with less than 7% of the vote. At the Assembly elections five years ago, we were only a few thousand votes off winning seats in both North East and South Wales, and our rising votes in the European and General Elections over the last two years put us even closer.

With the LibDem and Tory votes in meltdown, British National Party victories are seriously on the cards in three of the regions.

"We really are serious contenders this time," Wales Regional Organiser Brian Mahoney told Freedom. "If people will only come out and help us in our Days of Action, or donate to help us fight the highest-profile campaign ever, we can do it. But we do need more activists to raise our profile in the high streets and more money to pay for back-up leaflets and newspaper adverts.

"Just imagine how good it would feel to see Welsh Labour bigots such as Peter Hain and the EU gravy-train Kinnocks squirming over British National Party AMs taking their seats in the Cardiff Assembly! If that's not worth a few days of activity or picking up the phone to make a donation, what on earth is?"

"At last – a real choice!" First British National Party candidates ever in Province

"Northern Ireland is every bit as British as the Isle of Wight" – National Elections Officer Clive Jefferson.

For the first time ever, voters in Northern Ireland will have the chance to back British National Party candidates. Although the Party has had a presence in the province for years, it is only under new Regional Organiser Stephen Moore that we have built up a solid enough local organisation to register to contest elections.

"Things really took off during the Bring Our Boys Home petition campaign," says Mr. Moore. "Members who came out with us for the first time were blown away by the amount of support shown by members of the public."

"The campaign was a masterstroke for morale as well as public relations. Not only did it please the public, it also gave new activists the confidence to nail their colours to our mast."

"Voters are tired of the failures and sectarian gesture politics of the established parties in Northern Ireland. The DUP especially have lost their way; it seems that they're only interested in their salaries.

"Our pledge to donate 10% of our salaries to help keep the roads gritted next winter seems to be striking a cord, especially with many committed Christian voters."

"More leaflets in one go than ever before"

"More British National Party leaflets will drop onto Ulster doormats in the next couple of weeks than have ever been delivered in the entire history of the party up until now," said the dynamic head of our revamped Elections Department, Clive Jefferson.

"The central design team have done a brilliant job on the main election address. The Post Office has already approved it for delivery, and we're sure our message is going to have a big impact."

"Our activists on the ground report a growing groundswell of concern in Northern Ireland over the upsurge in immigration, so we've focused our message on this issue. Our Northern Ireland team hope that the many disillusioned Unionists and quietly pro-British Catholics will seize the opportunity to show the old political elite how they feel about the undemocratic transformation of their country.

"The PR system used for the Stormont Assembly is different from that in Scotland and Wales, but it still opens the door to smaller parties. Even though we've never stood before, we could win. It may depend on whether we have enough money," said Cllr. Jefferson.

"Our people there can't raise enough on their own, so it all depends on what donors on the mainland give over the next few days. We're very happy to top up funds in Northern Ireland, because we regard it as every bit as British as the Isle of Wight."

Green for go, go, go! Another hectic week for 'hardest-working' MEP

Energy and activism! These are the British National Party's secret weapons, the qualities our members have that help us overcome all the odds and win through attacks and injustices that would destroy any other party.

This determination and energy runs right through the party from bottom to top – as this short diary of Nick Griffin's latest "green week" shows. The European Parliament has seven "green weeks" a year, during which Parliament itself is shut.

MEPs are supposed to use the time in their constituencies and campaigning in their home countries. In fact, the majority simply take them as extra holidays, but the British National Party's North West MEP isn't like the rest of them, as this extract from his hectic diary shows:

FRI

Early morning:
Arrive home in Wales from Plenary Session in Strasbourg.

MON

Campaigning in by-election in Salford.
Evening: Speak at Salford meeting.

THUR

Driven to Hertfordshire for interview with journalist writing a "critical but accurate" history of the party. Work on laptop on way as usual. Guest speaker at meeting in Borehamwood.

"Public sympathy for the British National Party is still 'soft', but it continues to grow." Nick Griffin with shoppers in the centre of Liverpool.

SAT

Cumbria – Bring Our Boys Home final day of petition drive.
Afternoon: Meeting with Internet team then meeting in Party Office to create election leaflets.
Evening: Speak at Allerdale Social, then back to office for work on final proofs of new Freedom.

TUES

Back in Burnley, out on streets and working in local constituency office.
Speak in meeting in evening alongside outgoing local councillor Len Starr and a young Afghan war veteran.

FRI

Family day off
I've earned it, and so has Jackie!

"It's so good to know that people care. Thank you so much for helping Jaime and me." Burnley mum Terri Howarth and her daughter, who has inoperable brain cancer. Nick is shown about to hand over a £500 cheque from his English Fair Fund to help the appeal to give Jaime "the holiday of a lifetime in Disneyland".

SUN

Burnley – assist council by-election campaign. Write extra leaflet in local office, do BNPTV interview & meet constituents in local constituency office.
Evening: North West Regional Council meeting, pledge English Fair Fund donation to campaign against Manchester Cathedral's insult to St. George.

WED

Early morning: Campaign in centre of Liverpool to save the North West lifeboat control station in nearby Crosby. Move on to Crosby itself & do BNPTV report about dangers of proposed lifeboat cutbacks.
Evening: Speak at Liverpool meeting.

SAT

Back to Barnsley to join team on stall in market place and out on streets in afternoon.

Grooming scandal – MEP exposes 'sickening cover-up' by Home Office

Thousands of English, Sikh and Afro-Caribbean girls, some as young as 12, are having their lives and families destroyed in what senior police officers describe as "a tsunami of sexual abuse", but nothing is going to be done.

Despite pledges by the police and political elite to get tough on these disgusting crimes, the ConDem Home Office has hamstrung the "investigation" into so-called "grooming" by announcing from the start that it will not find any evidence of any religious link. This despite the fact that the gangs involved come from all over the Third World and have only one thing in common – Islam.

The cynical bent investigation plans have been exposed by the Home Office reply to a Freedom of Information request submitted by Nick Griffin. This reveals that the Politically Correct outcome of the Child Exploitation and Online Protection Centre's inquiry has been decided in advance.

The reply to Mr. Griffin's FOI request, issued by the Home Office Direct Communications Unit on 22nd March, proves the so-called "inquiry" is in fact a pre-judged farce. Despite promising that the investigation will try to "identify any patterns of offending or victimisation", it goes on to announce that it will find that there are none!

"Child sexual exploitation is not exclusive to any single culture, community, race or religion – it cuts across all communities. Neither can it be simplified along ethnic lines where the victims constitute one ethnicity and offenders another.

"The Government is reassured that the thematic assessment will look at child sexual exploitation as a whole and not as a race-specific issue."

In other words, the ConDem coalition government is determined to avoid even discussing the link between Islam and the brutal, racist sexual exploitation of thousands of vulnerable children. And despite Jack Straw's headline-grabbing talk about Pakistani men passing the victims round "like meat", the Labour opposition is happy to be part of this three monkeys act.

"This cynical cover-up is sickening," Mr. Griffin told Freedom. The political class are spitting in the face of thousands of victims of Muslim paedophile rape. And failure to deal honestly with the problem condemns thousands more children and their families to the same torment.

"This is why the British National Party will campaign to highlight this issue and seek justice for the victims throughout this summer.

"I promise the ConDem government and the Labour councils and senior police officers who are conspiring to cover this up, that we will make things hot for them this summer. If they won't stop this racist criminality, then we will provide the leadership that victim communities need to do it themselves."

See No Muslim Grooming, Hear No Victims Screaming, Speak No Defence for the Children

Euro is doomed to failure

In a speech to MEPs in the European Parliament on 24th March, Andrew Brons said that the adoption of the European Stability Mechanism to try to save the Euro was bound to fail.

"It will fail, not for want of money being thrown at the problem, but because the problem is endemic.

"The external value of a country's currency should reflect the demand for, and supply of, its currency. This, in turn, should reflect the demand for its exports, visible and invisible, and the demand for its imports, visible and invisible, as well as capital movements.

"The same currency value cannot possibly reflect the economic conditions in seventeen quite different economies.

One-size-fits-all currency a disaster

"Far from needing a mechanism to keep failing countries inside the Eurozone, we need a mechanism to rescue them from it. Even those countries that are seen as successes in the Euro-zone would be better off outside it with re-valued currencies."

Keep Selby Magistrates Court open

Closing local courts – another cut too far

Andrew Brons is supporting the campaign to help to keep Selby Magistrates Court open, after being contacted by numerous constituents from North Yorkshire concerned about the closure.

The MEP has written to Her Majesty's Court Service, saying:

"Further to the announcement that Selby Magistrates

Court is to close, despite the overwhelming opposition to the plan, I am strongly urging you to reconsider this proposal and to keep the Selby Court open.

Selby Magistrates Court is a well-utilised court with all the essential modern facilities needed for the large area and number of towns and parishes it serves.

There will be a great deal of extra work and cost incurred in transporting defendants arrested by Court Enforcement Officers, plus the extra time it will take transporting them to York.

Approximately 80% of the population in the Selby Justice Area will be faced with more than a 60-minute commute to York Court if Selby is closed. Please keep the Selby Magistrates Court open."

Simon Darby's VoxBox Show 'keeps getting better'

Professional: Simon Darby in the Strasbourg VoxBox studio

"Both the production quality and the presentation are so professional. The programmes are as informative as they are wide-ranging. I don't know how Simon and his guests find so much to talk about, but I'm so glad they do." - John Burton, London.

That's just typical of the fan email for Simon Darby's European Parliament VoxBox show. The professionally recorded television discussion programmes always feature Nick Griffin, plus other guests from nationalist parties all over Europe.

Simon's guests have included MEPs Andrew Brons, Bruno Gollnisch from the French Front National and Philip Claeys from the Flemish Vlaams Belang.

War against Iran will not achieve democracy

In a briefing prior to his intended speech in the European Parliament in Strasbourg on EU policy towards Iran, Andrew Brons had this to say:

"Iran's treatment of dissentients is appalling and its treatment of perceived criminals even worse. However, that could be said of many countries in the world.

"One does not have to approve of a country or its government to say that it is profoundly wrong to plan an aggressive and unprovoked war against it.

"There is always a pretext for war. Iran is said to be developing nuclear weapons, just as Iraq was said to have weapons of mass destruction. If you are thirsty for war, there is always a pretext for going to war.

"I would prefer Iran to develop into a secular democracy, but I am not optimistic. It will certainly not be achieved by war. The war against Iraq has turned that country into one that is no more democratic and considerably more dangerous and socially repressive.

"We must not allow ourselves to be dragged into another aggressive war that will inflame Muslims at home and abroad and kill thousands of innocent people."

And so do we, in Britain!

MEP out and about in Sowerby and Thirsk

On the last Saturday in March, Andrew Brons MEP and a team of activists were out in Sowerby and Thirsk distributing his new Constituency Newsletter.

The latest issue of this regular bulletin to the people of Yorkshire and the Humber focuses on Andrew's Community Fund.

The leaflet not only reported on the good causes that the MEP has helped in the past but also told constituents how they can apply for funding if they believe they have a suitable 'good cause' that needs the MEP's support.

'Equality' Case Special

The Equality Commission's three-year-long attempt to murder the British National Party wasn't just beaten off: it ended up in total disaster for the anti-British enemies of democracy and freedom.

Not only did we survive the most dangerous assault ever launched on a political party in peacetime Britain, we also made huge strides forward in no fewer than four key fields. Here, one of the lawyers who helped us prepare our defences outlines the ways in which the whole case ended up benefitting our Cause:

Goodbye to the 'racist' albatross

The first aim of the Commission's attack was to sharpen the tension within the party over the question of accepting non-indigenous Brits as members. They failed!

The first aim of the Commission's attack was to sharpen the tension within the party over the question of accepting non-indigenous Brits as members. Many activists had spoken to enough voters to know that what was perceived as a 'racist' admissions policy was a political albatross around the British National Party's neck.

Others, equally sincerely, looked at how New Labour had abandoned its principles and lost its way, and were determined to keep the British National Party as a refuge from the wall-to-wall multiculturalism that has hijacked every other institution in the country.

This was why Equality Commissar Simon Woolley went on live TV to boast of the intention to swamp and destroy the British National Party. The aim was to split the party between 'fundamentalists' and 'realists'.

But, having spoken to many of those involved and read all sorts of blogs during my involvement in this case, it has become clear to me that Woolley and Co. made a terrible miscalculation.

For it is clear that, without the CEHR taking away your choice, there would, sooner or later, have been a catastrophic split in the old British National Party over the issue of non-British members. But by leaving the party no alternative, by holding a legal gun to its head and forcing it to open its doors to 'non-whites', the Commission defused the unexploded bomb.

Faced with the choice between destruction and having a few Sikh and Christian West Indian members, the party's Extraordinary General Meeting voted overwhelmingly to survive. In doing so it also preserved party unity, while simultaneously cutting the rope that held the 'racist' albatross around its neck.

A year down the line, the Commission must now realise the full extent of their mistake. Because, thanks to their meddling and the Law of Unintended Consequences, the British National Party can no longer be described as 'racist'. Its membership is open to individuals of every race, creed and colour, but it remains a principled party whose Constitution explicitly commits it to the preservation of the traditional ethnic and cultural identities of Britain.

The party neither committed suicide, nor abandoned its principles, as some panic-stricken faint-hearts proposed. With hatches battened down and a resolute captain at the helm, our party sailed right through a legal hurricane. Now safe in the calm waters on the other side, it is neither 'racist' nor 'swamped'. The British National Party is still here is still here for our people, in a world where no-one else is.

No to bankruptcy, yes to a winning team!

The Commission also aimed to bankrupt the party and imprison its leaders, particularly Nick Griffin. Not only did this fail, but in the course of its resistance to this disgusting plot, the British National Party has pulled together a formidable legal team. This is another Unintended Consequence that Phillips and his backers must now deeply regret.

It did not happen easily. Indeed, the solicitor who appeared out of the blue at the start of the whole process, together with the first barrister employed on the case, handled things so badly that in

Legal assaults on the British National Party can prove very costly indeed to the aggressors hindsight one has to wonder if that was their real job.

But once the eventual winning team was gathered, the CEHR's lawyers were fought to a standstill and defeated.

The great news is that this winning team is still here, still fighting your corner, still seeing off threats to the party. We might not win every case – no lawyer ever does – but it is now a matter of public record that legal assaults on the British National Party can prove very costly indeed to the aggressors. The motto on the famous Tea Party snake banner springs to mind: "Don't tread on me!"

DONT TREAD ON ME

People like us fighting back all over the world. The American Tea Party banner warns the political elite

– Four Great Wins

Fit for purpose, thanks to the CEHR

Right from the start of the Commission attack, it was clear that they intended to keep on coming, to press home their assault to the point of destruction. This was why, working intensely with Mr. Griffin, we totally revamped the party's Constitution.

We were dragged into this fight with a well-meant but amateur 'dominoes club' Constitution. We now have a document of similar length and sophistication to those of the established political parties.

This work had to be done at break-neck pace under enormous strain, so there are inelegancies and typos in the resulting 12th Edition. But the multiple defences and almost limitless flexibility that we built into the new document did – and must continue to do – their job.

It was the new Constitution that enabled the British National Party to survive what was clearly the CEHR's game plan right from the start. Because after our EGM voted to remove the 'directly discriminatory' membership clauses that were the sole subject of the Commission's initial complaint, the shockingly biased judge at the County Court allowed them to amend their claim, without notice, and pursue the party for alleged indirect discrimination.

If the party had followed the advice of those who simply wanted to tinker with the old constitution, it would have been impossible to get out of this trap, because the required change would have taken the best part of a year. But Version 12 was created with just such a threat in mind, and gives the elected leader the power to turn on a sixpence.

Trevor Phillips: Thanks to all his hard work the British National Party's Constitution is now sophisticated and flexible

Just imagine the horror of the CEHR's lawyers when Mr. Griffin boldly sidestepped their new attack and the bias of Judge

Collins simply by taking a pen from his pocket and disabling the 'offending' clause!

Their frustration was clearly shown when the main prosecution QC rushed across the court to Mr. Griffin and, hissing with hatred, told him that he couldn't change the Constitution in this way and that, if he did, they would have him thrown in prison.

Having been deeply involved in writing the new document, however, Mr. Griffin was rightly confident. He quietly told the bullying barrister that his members had indeed given him the right to get the party out of the CEHR's legal killing field, and that this was exactly what he had just done!

So the new, serious party Constitution is now in place. It is essentially a contract between the party and its members, and it has been written primarily by an expert in English contract law. That's why parts of it are not easy to read, because serious level law – and the serious level of protection it brings – never is.

Some of its apparently most obscure clauses are in fact 'poison pills'; the legal devices also inserted in the Articles of business concerns to protect them from hostile takeover bids by financial predators. Thanks to the CEHR's folly, these now protect our party too.

In the months ahead, we will be working to simplify the Constitution wherever possible, and to build on the good work already done, further protecting the party against the future threats that we know will come from a frustrated Establishment. The irony is that, had the Equality Commission not attacked in the first place, none of this would have been done. Another own goal for Trevor Phillips!

A victory for all our People

Before the CEHR's attack on the British National Party, there was no recognition in law of the existence of the British nations as ethnic groups. As a result, it was impossible for a member of a British nation, such as the English, to seek the protection of the anti-discrimination laws.

Thanks to the CEHR's botched attack on this party, this injustice has ended. The Powers That Be have not stated this openly, but it is the unavoidable legal consequence of their own actions.

Put simply, the reason is that 'discrimination' on ethnic grounds can only be proven by accepting that there are two different ethnic groups being compared and treated differently.

So in order to claim in law that the British National Party was discriminating against non-British ethnics, they had to accept that we were discriminating in favour of members of the British ethnic groups (English, Scottish, Welsh, Irish and Northern Irish). And in order to do that, the CEHR had implicitly to accept that those British groups are indeed defined by ethnic origin.

Up until then, they denied the indigenous peoples of our islands the protection of discrimination law by classifying us all merely as 'white' – a category that is not protected in any way. We were legally invisible in our own country! We didn't exist.

In the long-run, apart from simply having survived an attack that was meant to destroy you, your great achievement in this epic battle against the Equality bigots is to have forced from them this legally binding recognition of the existence of the British, English etc. as ethnic groups for the purposes of the law. Thanks to your resistance, and the CEHR's mistake, we are no longer a non-people.

This is not an academic point: it gives our people huge potential power. Now we exist, the CEHR have a legal duty to look after our interests. So too do Local Education Authorities, councils, quangos, the Charity Commission and so on. And when the bureaucrats who run the multicultural 'British' state ignore that duty, individuals, families and community groups now have the right to seek Judicial Review and to sue our masters for dereliction of duty.

It may well take years for this new approach to bear fruit, but when it does happen, it will be thanks to you – and Trevor Phillips!

SPECIAL REPORT: A nation on the dole

The number of Britons out of work continues to rise inexorably, as we pay for the bankers' recession. Most worryingly, the number of young Britons unemployed is now at record levels. Once again, as under Thatcher, the Establishment is blighting the future of an entire generation. In this Freedom special feature, we look at the problem, the causes and what we would do about it.

Unemployment in Britain is spiralling out of control.

In the three months to the end of December, the latest figures available from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) show that the number out of work rose by 44,000 to almost 2.5 million, making the unemployment rate 7.9%.

The number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance increased by 2,400 in January to 1.46 million. The number of people in part-time work because they could not find a full-time job rose by 44,000 to 1.19 million, the highest figure since records began nearly twenty years ago.

The number of people unemployed for more than a year rose by 17,000 to a total of 833,000.

The problem is worst for our young people, the future of our nation. Nine hundred and sixty-five thousand people aged under 25 are out of work. That's more than one in five of that age group and the highest, again, since records began.

A total of 938,000 of 16-24-year-olds in England alone were not in education, employment or training, left with no job and few prospects. That was in December last year, and it's getting worse all the time.

Youth unemployment especially is a criminal waste

From those leaving school at sixteen, to graduates, there are no jobs. Many graduates have been conned into taking on huge debts to obtain degrees which are of little use in the job market, thanks to the last Labour Government's policy of trying to send 50% of young people to university, regardless of whether it did them any good or led to any hope of a job.

The Coalition Government's response to youth unemployment has been to make it even worse, adding to the terrible waste of having so many young people with no experience of work.

They axed the Education Maintenance Allowance study support grant for low-income students in England, and the Future Jobs Fund, which was used to fund temporary employment for 18-24-year-olds in England, Scotland and Wales who have been out of work for more than six months.

The result is that young people are left to a life on the dole with no qualifications, have no prospect of getting any and hence of ever getting off it.

Older workers in once-proud British trades like mining, shipbuilding, car making and engineering, which have all been wrecked by cheap foreign imports, will never work again. Younger workers may never work at all.

That's the reality of Britain today – a nation on the dole.

OUR ANSWER: British Nationalism

Internationalism and the globalised bankers' free market got us into this mess. Nationalism alone will get us out of it, by addressing the root causes.

First, and immediately, we will divert foreign aid money from foreigners to Britons by scrapping the almost £10-billion-per-year Overseas Development budget that the Tories inherited from Labour and refuse to cut.

This is British taxpayers' money, and we will invest it in rebuilding British industry and education and saving the NHS hospitals and essential services. This alone would be enough to stave off many public service cuts and job losses.

We would also withdraw from the European Union, which would enable us to protect British jobs from cut-price immigrant labour. Many of these job-stealers now come from Eastern Europe and so cannot be stopped by any measure passed by any British Government whilst we are still subject to Brussels.

Hundreds of thousands of jobs now done by migrant workers would become available to Britons, who would not be paid any more welfare benefits if they refused to take them.

Withdrawing from the EU would also enable us to

The common sense policies of a British National Party Government will rebuild British industry and bring back jobs protect our fish stocks from foreign plundering. This would give us a prosperous fishing industry once more, creating many jobs in, and restoring pride and purpose to, depressed coastal communities.

Finally, it would reduce Government expenditure currently siphoned off in tribute to Brussels.

More fundamentally, we would work to free Britain from the global banking and finance system that caused the current recession. If we were not part of a global economy, we would not be in a global recession, nor would we be in hock to the global money markets. The one area where we would gladly seek

The long-term aim is to free our country and our people from the international money machine

massive job losses is among the speculators and parasites in the City of London, as well as amongst bankers, who would get no bonuses in our Britain.

The parasitic banking system which corrupts the economy by creating money out of nothing as interest-bearing credit would be made the servant of the nation, not its master. The right to create the Nation's credit will be restored to the elected and sovereign government. Money will be created by decree – exactly as the Government is now doing by "Quantitative Easing" – and spent into the economy debt- and interest-free to fund massive investment in revitalising British manufacturing and infrastructure.

New technology using light, strong carbon fibres will revitalise the British motor industry and build a new generation of trains to expand and fully electrify our rail network, whilst creating jobs once more in areas such as the West Midlands.

Our Britain will base her power generation and fuel on our still-abundant coal reserves and on ultra-safe molten salt nuclear reactors, rather than imported oil and gas.

Mines shut down by Thatcher will reopen, and the proud working communities of which they were the heart will live once more, each community sharing ownership in their mine as part of the wide replacement of ownership of workplaces by speculators through shareholding by ownership directly by their workforces (as exemplified by high-street success story the John Lewis Partnership).

Agriculture will be reborn as family farms are recreated to feed Britain, her population allowed to adjust by natural demographic processes, combined with immigration controls, to a lower level that our land can sustain to feed.

The long-term aim is to free our country and our people from the international money machine that has ground us all down and now spits millions out onto the dole while bleeding our economy to death. We will build in its place an independent, self-sustaining national economy, insulated from the shocks and chaos of the speculator-run global market. An economy run by Britons, for Britons.

Where have all the jobs gone?

Freedom looks at three of the main ways the Political Elite have let us all down:

1 The Bankers' Recession

The short-term cause of Britain's unemployment crisis is the bankers' recession. The collapse in the globalised free trade economy, on which successive Tory and Labour regimes have made Britain dependent, is dragging British industry and commerce down with it. In turn, tax revenues to the public purse have been drastically cut, resulting in huge job losses, with even more to come.

The figures speak for themselves. If the unemployment statistics for the last quarter of 2008 – when the disintegration in a sea of financial fraud and bad debt of much of Wall Street and the City had yet to hit ordinary folk – are compared with those of the last quarter of 2010, the latest available, they make grim reading.

Well, the British National Party would, and a lot of greedy bankers would be paying a lot of extra tax!

2 Public Sector Cuts

The public sector has been hit by two factors, one an effect of the bankers' recession and the other an effect of the international financial system that caused the bankers' recession.

The first factor is that, as the bankers' bust caused firms to collapse or lay off workers, tax receipts to fund the public sector dried up. Bankrupt companies and unemployed workers no longer pay direct taxes. People on the dole can't afford to buy as much. So there is a drop in the amount the State can get from them through indirect taxes like VAT and fuel duty.

This in turn worsened the expenditure exceeding its income worse.

The Government intends to reduce central funding to local authorities, which provide most local services, by 28% over the next four years. The result is cuts in services and massive redundancies.

Some of the cuts may well cost lives, with jobs lost across almost every local authority Fire Service.

The National Health Service was supposed to be 'ring-fenced' against cuts, yet more than 50,000 NHS jobs will be lost across the UK over the next five years. Sadly, most of these will be in frontline services, with the overpaid bureaucrats who impose the cuts doing everything they can to protect their own departments.

Meanwhile, despite growing overstretched thanks to Cameron's obsession with poking his nose into other peoples' business, our Armed Forces are to be reduced by 17,000 over the next four years. In the same period, the police face some 28,000 job cuts.

The only spending the Government isn't cutting is the only one that doesn't help anyone in Britain at all. The Overseas Development foreign aid budget – a racket whereby money is transferred from poor people in rich countries to rich people in poor countries – is now running at £9.1 billion a year.

That's TWICE the cut being made in central government funding to local councils, and Cameron aims to increase it year on year! It's YOUR money he's giving away! What would you do with it?

3 Internationalism & Globalism

Apart from the bankers' crisis and government cuts, the internationalist policies of Tory, Labour and LibDem alike make the job loss crisis even worse in several ways:

- Immigration: British workers have to compete for jobs with workers from low-pay Eastern Europe. Britain's biggest retail employer, Tesco, has admitted to recruiting staff from Slovakia to work in its British stores.

- European Union: Brussels bureaucracy is costing British jobs. A quarter of the whole workforce at a major

The greed and corruption of the big banks has brought the real economy to its knees

Aberdeenshire fish processing firm were laid off last month due to Brussels's fishing quota. Peterhead-based Fresh Catch said it had been badly hit by a 95% cut this year in the blue whiting quota imposed by the EU on British fishermen to allow foreign fishermen to keep taking our fish.

All US-based multinational Kraft wanted was profitable Cadbury brand names like Dairy Milk and Double Deckers, which they can make cheaper elsewhere in their worldwide empire.

This is what has led to the virtual deindustrialisation of Britain. Once the 'Workshop of World', we scarcely make anything any more.

Bureaucrats slash frontline services

In addition, the vast amounts of red tape imposed on us by Brussels is strangling Small and Medium Enterprises, costing billions and destroying jobs.

- Globalised Free Market: Capitalism leaves profitable British firms vulnerable to foreign multinationals, which buy them up, asset-strip them and shut them down.

This is what happened to the Cadbury chocolate factory in Bristol, which was shut down with the loss of 400 jobs in January.

- Global Warming Scam: Taxes and subsidies for near-useless 'alternative' energy systems like wind farms, and 'climate change mitigation' hand-outs to rich developing countries like China and India, are now costing Britain £18 billion per year. That's a lot of money to give away on account of a load of dodgy dossiers and manipulated statistics.

But the political elite like the 'climate change' story because it's a great excuse to tax and control ordinary people, and because a 'global problem needs a global solution'. It's not really about polar bears – it's about power!

We'd save hospitals – NOT the banks!

Overall, unemployment rose by nearly a quarter as the bankers' recession hit. Nearly 2.5 million are now officially unemployed, but millions more are jobless, though 'disguised' as long-term sick or similar to fiddle the figures down. School-leavers and workers in their peak productive years between the ages of 25 and 49 were worst hit, with their unemployment rate shooting up by nearly a third.

Thanks to their clout with their friends and puppets in the political elite, the one group unaffected by what some call the Banksters' Bust are the bankers and City speculators who caused it all in the first place.

After a brief lull, when media coverage of the disasters caused by their greed was at its height, bankers' bonuses are back with a shocking bang. Predictably, after a bit of posturing and empty rhetoric, the ConDem Government has done nothing to put this right.

second factor. The Government, both the last one and the current one, has been forced to fund public spending by borrowing on the international money markets, saddling us all with enormous interest payments.

As a result, the Government has to fund current public spending by borrowing even more from global bankers, piling up ever-bigger debts and interest payments until the country heads for bankruptcy. This was the last Labour Government's policy.

Spending has to be cut drastically, as the Tory/LibDem coalition is doing, further reducing tax revenue as huge numbers are thrown on the dole. According to the Confederation of British Industry, this has probably already cost more than a million jobs.

Labour's plan adds to our debts, while the ConDems' cuts income. Both therefore make the problem of the State's

The smashing of the Cross – Islam's war against Christians

As the Afghan Koran-burning massacre highlights the brutal intolerance of Islam, Nick Griffin braves the Turkish occupation zone to bring you the pictures the 'mainstream' press won't let you see.

From Manchester to Northern Cyprus, Muslim occupation means ethnic cleansing and a relentless war against Christianity. Crossing into occupied Northern Cyprus to expose the truth about this barbarism isn't without risk; last month, three Polish MEPs were arrested for doing just that.

But, guided by refugees now living in exile, that's exactly what Nick and Jackie Griffin did at the end of March, while on a short holiday break before the rigours of the campaign for the May elections.

After crossing the heavily patrolled border, they visited and photographed a number of ancient churches desecrated and looted by the Turkish invaders.

These rare photos give a glimpse of the cultural and ethnic cleansing that takes place everywhere

Islam takes over a once Christian country. Never before published in a British newspaper, they should serve as a warning to us all, as immigration and high birth rates lead to an explosion of the Muslim population in Britain.

Resisting oblivion

Resistance recently held a vigil in remembrance of all young indigenous victims of racial murder. The successful event was held on Saturday 12th March and marked the start of a monumental new campaign.

Young Brits organise to fight back!

No struggle to preserve identity and culture can succeed unless it attracts growing numbers of young people. So it's great to see Resistance activity on the streets of London.

Resistance is the new young-adults wing of the British National Party. Its central planning team of a dozen keen and dedicated young men and women from all over the country have set themselves a mission. Resistance organiser Keiren Trent tells us more:

"We're activism-based. We're determined to bring a new wave of 'intelligent and militant resistance' to the struggle. The way in which the English Defence League has caught on among so many young people shows that there's a new spirit out there. Together, we're fighting back!

"Today's generation have grown up with multicult propaganda and forced school trips to mosques. We've heard all the lies – seen through them. The time has never been better to take the nationalist message to young people, but it has to be lively, it has to be radical, it has to be real. That's why we launched Resistance not with a stuffy press conference but with a demo.

"Nearly everyone in our

Fighting back: Defending the culture for future generations. The Resistance motif is fittingly militant generation has some personal experience of anti-English or anti-British racism, so it was a natural choice to hold our first demo on the taboo subject of racist murders against our people. So we gathered at the Peter Pan 'Lost Boys' memorial in London's Kensington Park. The demo went really well, bringing our people together and attracting interest and sympathy from passers-by."

Resistance leader Kieren Trent talks to local media during a demonstration against a proposed mosque

“Our ancestors fought for this land, paying for it with their blood. They fought so we could be free. We will not let their sacrifice be in vain.”

Resistance is the essential in upholding our values and our freedoms

“Scenes witnessed in 2009, when Muslims taunted our brave heroes, have enraged the British public”

Safeguard the Future for Our National Health Service

Money for bombing raids and benefits for foreigners.

How can this Government afford to send planes to Libya on bombing missions when it is cutting jobs and hitting Britons with price hikes on every essential item and service that we need?

Why should we be paying our hard-earned taxes to this Government only for it to then make benefit payments to foreigners coming here under the pretence of looking for a job?

Cameron and his cronies aren't interested at all in providing for the British people. They just want to play war games on the world stage, while at the same time claiming to be 'humanitarian' by using our money to give handouts to immigrants.

Grow your own, and hurt the supermarkets

I won't be buying any salad, vegetables, fruit or potatoes from supermarkets this summer, because I'm growing my own.

A cut in my working hours for my job with the local council, and my wife being laid off from her part-time school dinners job, means that we have to tighten our belts, so growing some of the food we need seems a sensible option.

I bought 1,400 lettuce seeds for just £1, and by growing them in pots, and staggering planting them throughout the season over the next four years, I won't have to pay £1.20 for a lettuce from my supermarket that has probably travelled across Europe to get there.

Self-sufficiency is a key part of British Nationalism, so our members should be providing food for themselves by growing their own fruit and vegetables.

Make your voice heard

It is the duty of every member of the British National Party to make their voice heard at the local elections on the first Thursday in May.

Hopefully, like me, you will be able to vote for a British National Party candidate, but if you can't, you should still go to the polling station to cast your vote.

Just add another box to the bottom of the ballot paper and write in 'British National Party' and put a cross next to it in another box.

This isn't a wasted exercise, as all such ballot papers will be scrutinised by not just the elections officers but all the other candidates and their agents as well.

This way we can show them that there is support for the British National Party across the country and not just where Party candidates are standing.

Time for an English Parliament

With elections for the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Irish assemblies taking place this year, it should bring home to everyone in England that we are being discriminated against.

Residents in Wales, Scotland and Ulster get the best of both worlds, with the benefits of having their own regional parliaments as well as the Westminster Parliament. That means, in the case of Wales, there are just Welsh Assembly Members voting on what is best for Wales and not worrying about the rest of the UK.

For English men and women, there is no such benefit. We only have the Westminster Parliament, where Welsh, Scottish and Northern Irish MPs vote on the issues that affect England.

Say 'No' to EU Dictate on Migrant Workers

So new European Union legislation coming into effect in May allows any migrant worker coming to Britain looking for work to sign on the dole if they can't get a job.

Previously, migrant workers from other EU states arriving here had to have worked in a job for twelve months before being eligible for unemployment benefit.

From May, thanks to the European Union, Polish 'workers' and their colleagues from other Eastern European countries will be able to avail themselves of the National Insurance contributions paid in over a lifetime of work by the majority of Britain's older generation. That's a scandal, and our Government should be saying 'No' to this latest EU dictate.

Still Taking British Jobs

It makes me very angry when I hear football supporters chanting the name of a foreign footballer who is temporarily wearing the shirt of the team they follow.

Foreign footballers are just like any other migrant worker coming to Britain. They are taking the job of a British worker.

A whole generation of young Britons are losing out on a career in professional football because their opportunity to play for a team has been taken by a footballer from overseas.

I would like to see the Football Association discourage the signing of foreign players by providing incentives for clubs to produce their own homegrown players.

Signing a foreign player should be frowned upon and regarded as an unnecessary expense, while bringing on young local players will be a badge of honour proudly worn by every club.

Time to end misguided cult of Multi-Culturalism

South East British National Party stalwart Tim Rait

David Cameron has spoken out against the misguided policy of multiculturalism, pursued by the Conservatives and the other mainstream parties for so long.

We must be grateful that he has begun to see the light.

When I stood in Maidenhead for the British National Party at the 2005 General Election (and again last year) I was privileged to take part in the public debates with the other candidates.

When the issue of the multiculturalism was raised, while the other speakers were clearly in awe of it, I was the one candidate who spoke against it.

I was able to make a strong case and quoted the former Socialist Chancellor of West Germany, Helmut Schmidt, who had already spoken against such policies.

Only two months later we suffered the 7/7 terrorist bombings in London. The main parties then began, perhaps for the first time, to question the cult of multiculturalism.

Last week it was announced that, with uncontrolled immigration under the Labour Government, well over three million people arrived in the country as long-term migrants between 1997 and 2010. Reportedly some 80 per cent of those came from outside the EU, plus there were perhaps another one million who came and stayed illegally. No wonder that Sir Andrew Green of Migration Watch has described this as 'Labour's great betrayal'.

Sir Andrew has also stated that it is changing Britain 'in ways that majority of the population did not ask for, were not consulted about and did not wish to see'.

So such policies came about without any approval or democratic mandate from the British people. This does not reflect well upon the three main political parties.

Image the media don't want seen

The power of the popular appeal of the British National Party's 'Bring Our Boys Home' campaign against the Afghan War was again proven last month, when the controlled media completely blanked the handing in of the petition to Downing Street.

Three national TV news companies sent camera crews to interview Nick Griffin on the steps of Number 10, but despite the obvious news appeal of the story, they all censored it, clearly deciding that the British people should not be told that there is a serious party that rejects the unhealthy Establishment consensus for war.

"It just shows yet again how important it is that we build our own alternative media, particularly on the Internet," National Organiser Adam Walker said. "More and more people are looking for their own news. Trust in the old 'mainstream' news gatekeepers is breaking down, and people are finding out the truth for themselves on the web.

"As an ex-serviceman myself, I felt privileged to help hand in the petition on behalf of the youngsters still on the frontline in a war that has nothing to do with Britain," said Mr Walker.

"The service by the Rev. West must have been the most sincere such event held at the Cenotaph for many a long year. Usually they are besmirched by old party hypocrites, but not on this day."

Getting our feet on the first rung of the local government ladder

"If you want to climb a ladder, you start by stepping onto the bottom rungs. We should have seen this years ago and set about getting our activists to learn their trade as community champions in parish, town and community councils."

This is how National Elections Officer Clive Jefferson explains the importance of our record number of 'first rung' local councillors elected unopposed in this year's English elections.

"In the bad old days, some belittled the efforts of our volunteers working in these unpaid positions. We even had an Elections Officer who said they're 'not real councillors'.

Well they certainly are. The fact that they do the job for love, rather than money marks them out as more genuine than many higher level politicians. And showing the public that we are serious about helping to make Britain a better place is very serious.

In fact, it's the most important job of all, which is why it's so good that we're starting to take it seriously.

John Cave, British National Party stalwart and new Deputy Mayor of Padiham

John Robinson, first British National Party Councillor ever in Sussex

Doug Ward, Yorkshire regional press officer and new Parish Councillor in Luddington & Haldenby

Where We Stand

♥ EUROPEAN UNION

Leave the European Union to restore Britain's Sovereignty. Trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but retake our freedom and Keep the Pound. Scrap the Human Rights Act which is a criminals' charter.

♥ DEFENCE

Immediate withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan to save lives and £Billions. Stop the merging of our Armed Forces into an EU super force. No British involvement in foreign wars that are none of Britain's business.

♥ SAFE STREETS

Crack-down on crime with more police on the streets and zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs. Tougher treatment of criminals with capital punishment for child killers and terrorists.

♥ IMMIGRATION SANITY

Britain is full up, it's time to shut the doors! No more foreign-funded mosques. Deport foreign criminals and Islamic extremists. It's our Britain - they should love it, or leave it!

♥ INDUSTRY

Protect British jobs and industry from unfair foreign import dumping. Fund proper apprenticeships and investment in energy production rather than bailing out corrupt and failed banks.

♥ HEALTH

Protect the National Health Service from the Tories' privatisation rip-off. Cut bureaucracy, not nurses' jobs and hospitals. Leave GPs to see patients, not manage budget sheets.

♥ EDUCATION

Return to traditional teaching methods, with discipline and the '3Rs.' Restore social mobility by bringing back grammar schools. Cut university places in half and provide free places to bright youngsters whatever their background.

♥ PENSION FAIR DEAL

Boost pensions and stop the scandal of forcing elderly folk who've paid in all their lives to sell their homes to pay for health care. The £Billions wasted on foreign aid should be used at home to help our own needy.

♥ ENVIRONMENT

Protect our countryside. Ban greenfield-site house building except in cases of genuine local need. End field trials of GM crops and restore our 200 mile fishing limit. No more wind factories.

♥ GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY

Government must put British interests first. A return to moral values and policies that strengthen the family and community. Tougher penalties for corruption in public life.

♥ REMEMBER...

It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last policy. Like all the other democratic political parties, the British National Party includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of Labour, the Tories and the Lib-Dems? Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Downing St. answers to 10,000 protesters

On 17th March, Nick Griffin MEP called at Downing Street with a petition signed by over 10,000 people to demand that British soldiers be brought back from Afghanistan and all the foreign wars with do not directly affect Britain.

Christian Council of Britain moderator Rev Robert West conducted the service, and West Mids Organiser Alwyn Deacon played the Last Post

Pete Molloy shows a petition form to the press

The British National Party's Veterans Officer, Pete Molloy, received a letter on Friday 25th March 2011 from the Direct Communications Unit at Downing Street.

The letter relates to the handing in of the party's 'Bring Our Boys Home' petition that was handed into Downing Street by the party's Chairman and five members of the British Veterans Group.

Mr Molloy said "I was about to write to the Prime Minister to chase him up on how he was dealing with our petition.

I know he is a very busy man at the moment with his pet project of selective interference of regime change and in particular, Libya, but the majority of the British people want our troops home out of Afghanistan. "

If any party member that has served or is currently serving in HM forces and would like to join the British Veterans Group, please contact Pete Molloy at veterans@bnp.org.uk

The letter sent on behalf of David Cameron
